Message for the Week

God blesses the people who patiently endure testing. Afterwards they will receive the crown of life that God has promised to those who love him.

James 1:12

LIFE IN THE PRE-PREP!

Looking at these pictures, makes us all want to return to the Pre-Prep. They sure have a lot of fun - wonder if any work ever gets done? First up pictures from the Playball Festival.

THE FARM VISIT: GRADE R MAY 2009

Down at HeronBridge where the river flows,
The "Farmyard Friends" put on a show.
The big black boar rooted the ground,
Whilst the sheep and goat were led around.
The children had fun touching and feeding,
And the handsome drake enjoyed life preening.
With a bleet, bleet here and an oink, oink there,
Our farmyard friends taught us how to care!

PARENTING MATTERS BY NIKKI BUSH

YOU CANNOT REMAIN UNCHANGED

"The meeting of two personalities is like the contact of two chemical substances: if there is any reaction, both are transformed." C G Jung

Whether you like it or not, whether you are aware of it or not – having children does change you. I have always maintained that my children are as much teachers to me as I am to them. While my husband and I lead our family we also sit at the feet of our children, prepared to learn from them also. "What can we learn from them? How can we grow from them?" Whatever the circumstances or situations, these questions are there for the asking. And in the answering comes our growth.

At times children push you forward, at others slow you down. Are you awake enough, and conscious enough to see the lessons along the way? Are you brave enough to read the signs and take the appropriate action?

Children invariably know how to press your hot buttons. Are they doing this just because, or, in order to get your attention? Do they need you to really see them, understand them and give them the kind of attention that they really need, or are they shining a light on an issue in your life that you need to address and heal? You can only see the front of you while your children can see the back too. I believe that they are like mirrors, shining a light on places you would never otherwise be able to see except through them. This is why they so often create opportunities for their parents to heal past wounds from their own childhood. Whether their parents are ready to dance with the lessons their children bring, or not, is entirely up to them.

Children will always challenge what you know, how you do things, and how you respond to life. They are good personal coaches to have around for they keep you on your toes. They do not come with an instruction manual and you have to "feel" your way forward. This is much the same way in which you have to approach the changing world we are faced with today. You need to ask the same questions: What can I learn from it? How can I grow from it? What do I need to change? Why? These questions will be some of the best survival tools for the 21st century – a world no longer characterised by logic and reason, but by chaos of constant change which will transform us all, and the way we live, one way or another. How it transforms us is dependent on how deeply we are prepared to interact with our world, or whether our fear and lack of knowledge will get the better of us and paralyzes us from moving forward.

If we want to raise children filled with hope for the future, we have to respond to our changing world and the challenges our children bring, with optimism. Whatever the shape, size or gender of your family today, remember just one thing: "Family is where hope lives." (Nikki Bush & Graeme Codrington, Future-proof Your Child, Penguin 2008).
